[illegible]

The image shows a close-up of an open, antique manuscript. The pages are made of a light-colored, heavily textured material, possibly parchment or aged paper, which is now browned and stained with dark spots and streaks. The text is written in a dark, cursive script, characteristic of Tibetan or other South Asian languages. The left page is partially obscured by a large, irregular tear, and the right page also shows significant damage, with large sections of the text missing. The overall condition of the manuscript is poor, suggesting it is very old and has been subjected to significant wear and tear over time.
